INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF FORENSIC MEDICINE

Violence against people is a phenomenon as old as the human species itself, but today it has become so worrying that it has triggered a real social alarm. In fact, it is a ubiquitous phenomenon that cuts across all social classes and categories (women, children, people with disabilities, the elderly and/or mentally fragile, migrants, prisoners, students, workers). This scenario is present at both national and international levels and does not seem to be countered by adequate preventive and deterrent measures, given the fragmentation of the legal framework and the lack of synergy among the various components of society. A concrete action to combat violence against people must include radical and multi-faceted measures aimed at preventing this phenomenon and ensuring adequate protection for all victims of violence. With this conviction and belief in mind, university institutions have felt obliged to promote (also by means of a debate with national and international experts and representatives of institutions and anti-violence associations) the creation of collective action strategies aimed at promoting cultural emancipation, through which effective prevention and management strategies can be developed for this phenomenon. During the various sessions, an in-depth dialogue with the authors and a subsequent debate with the group will focus on contributions divided into three macro-areas: domestic violence, violence in institutions, violence in relationships or social violence.
